Leading a Culture of Service Excellence: Lessons From the Mouse

In today's competitive market, developing a service-excellence strategy is an important part of any leader's role. Beyond developing the strategy, however, there is the challenge of executing the plan. It is in the execution that service-excellence strategies become a reality or simply another "flavor-of-the-month" program. Employees watch to see how committed the organization truly is to customer service and take their cues directly from their leaders. To effectively implement an organization-wide service-excellence strategy, today's leaders must rely on the skills of a facilitator and idea champion and must walk the talk of service excellence. Based on the leadership principles Dennis learned, lived, and taught during his 20 years with Walt Disney World, this presentation highlights specific leadership behaviors that bring a service strategy to life and describes how to "hardwire" service excellence into an organization's culture.

Navigating the Storm: ASCs & Emergency Preparedness in an Era of Heightened Risks

Natural disasters seem to be occurring more frequently. Californians have faced fires, floods, earthquakes, and recently, even hurricanes. Tensions and workplace violence incidents are on the rise. CMS and accreditation organizations expect ASCs to be prepared for emergencies and include an emergency preparedness plan that utilizes risk assessment, policies and procedures, communication, and training. Learn what is required of ASCs and how we can successfully implement a program to prepare and respond to these situations.

Unlocking the Accreditation Enigma: Insights from the Fab Four

Explore accreditation with our expert panel—representatives from AAAHC, ACHC, QuadA, and TJC. We will dissect California’s unique landscape, delve into deemed vs. non-deemed surveys, and demystify collaboration with the California Department of Public Health (CDPH).
